

Mitochondria are the powerhouse of the cell and generate most of the chemical energy needed to power biochemical reactions in the cell.

Photosynthesis converts light energy into chemical energy stored as glucose, and it takes place in the chloroplasts of plant cells.

The Treaty of Westphalia was signed in sixteen forty eight and it established the modern principle of state sovereignty in Europe.